Utah County's Arches National Park?

A huge ice bridge is all that remains of a massive snowslide that poured down into Provo Canyon over Bridal Veil Falls during the winter. A spokesman for Bridal Veil Falls Resort says the bridge is not sliding, but is slowly melting as the warm weather continues. There is little danger of the snowpack sliding into the river, but boulders and trees on top are continually falling down. These may be cleared to prevent them from blocking the river. Bridal Veil Falls, and the slide, remain an attractive tourist spot as travelers continue to stop in the canyon to view the aftermath of Mother Nature's power.
